Duty of care

Section 34 of the Environmental Protection Act (1990) puts the onus of managing business waste safely and responsibly onto the waste producer. You must prevent it from being deposited, treated, or disposed of in an unauthorised or harmful way.

What is waste defined as?

Waste is any substance or object you discard or intend to discard – even if what is produced can be reused or repaired.

Do I need a Waste Transfer Note?

Every business that produces waste has a responsibility for completing a waste transfer note (WTN) with their waste collector. Once you have your WTN you must keep it for two years and you can be asked to produce it at any time by enforcement officers.

How do I choose a waste collector?

You must ensure that your waste is only ever transferred to an authorised person or company. They must be a registered waste carrier. You can face financial penalties and/or legal action if you choose an unauthorised collector.

The council take legal action against businesses who don't have a waste disposal contract and dump rubbish on the street or mix it with domestic waste.

How do I present my waste for collection?

Your business waste should be presented for collection at the right time and collection rules apply regardless of who collects your waste.

How can we help?

Our business waste service is an affordable and flexible waste management solution for businesses in Breckland.
